Mom's New Invention

Two weeks without their parents. It was every teen’s dream, Connor thought as he dried himself off. Sure, it might have been better if his little sister wasn't around, but what could he do? He stepped out of the bathroom and walked toward his room, but a sudden sound behind him made him spin around.

"There's my baby!" He yelped as the robot nanny his mom had developed grabbed him and pulled him into the nursery that she inhabited. "All nice and clean, hmm?"

"Nanny disable code Connor four-sixteen!" He said, but the robot nanny did not seem to hear, depositing him on the changing table and strapping him down.

"Don't want baby Connor to fall off!"

"Nanny disable code Connor four-sixteen!" He repeated, but the robot continued unimpeded, lifting his legs and slipping a diaper under them. "Nanny disable" She shoved a pacifier into his mouth, reducing him to infantile mumbles.

"I disabled your codes." He turned and looked at Liz, who stood there with a smirk as she watched her big brother get diapered. "I need you out of the way and out of trouble while mom and dad are gone." She smiled, following along as the robot picked up the freshly diapered boy and carried him over to a bouncer. Her advanced tech allowed her to scale everything in the room to his size and she deposited him inside. "You'll spend the next two weeks here with the nannybot, living the perfect baby life." Connor spat the pacifier out, but the nanny returned it to his mouth almost instantly. "I even made a guess as to how many diapers you'll go through, but I'm sure you'd try to beat it if I told you." She grinned. "Oh, one last thing. Best part is, I used your profile to program Nanny, so mom and dad will think it was all your idea, so don’t even think about trying to tattle." She smiled and left the nursery. "See you in two weeks, baby."
