Chapter 1

The Bet

Roseville's Little League team, overly confident in their abilities, challenged the girls to a game. They should've read the fine print on the bet more closely, because it stated that anyone on the losing team could not play baseball for the rest of the year.

Their mothers, desperate for a way to keep their sons out of trouble, came up with an unorthodox idea. Since the girls were all on the Little League team and well on the way to the championship, it just made sense for the boys to be Roseville's new troupe of ballerinas. The boys whined and fought, but they quickly learned two things: their moms don't take no for an answer and spankings hurt when you're just wearing tights.
